At the rate at which technology is changing, this suit by DOJ became almost meaningless less than one year into litigation. Motivation for continuance seemed more politically directed than legally. It was like trying to shoot down an F-15 with a slingshot.

Even before the suit began, Microsoft was evolving into another form, with more internet focus.

Perhaps a more proactive legal approach via Congress (winch) may work better.

Notice any correlation between the demise of the stock market rally and Microsoft's legal troubles?
Hmmm! Microsoft, like it or not is intricately woven into the economy. What used to be said about GM?
